WYPALL® X80 Wipers absorb water and oil faster than laundered shop towels¹

"Use a grimy, stained shop towel on my car? Not a chance!"

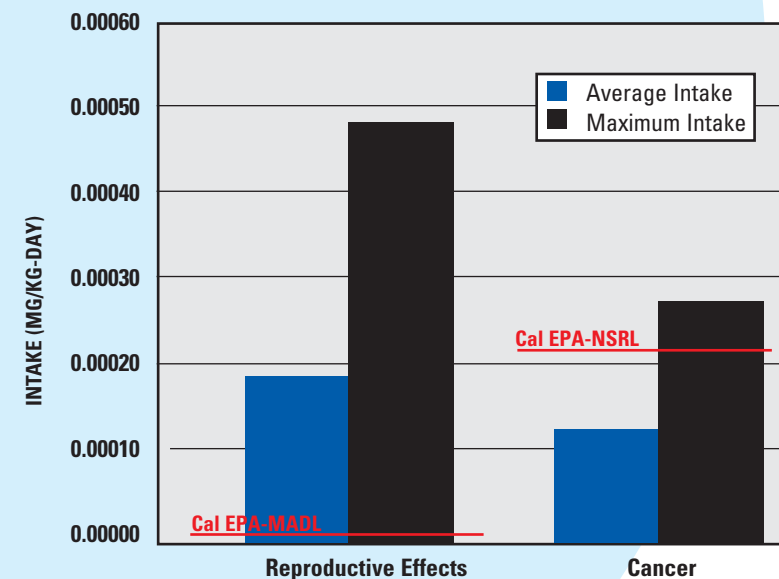

Gradient Corporation, a nationally known specialist in toxicology and contaminant transport, recently assessed the significance of possible exposure to metals identified in laundered shop towels. The conclusions were clear:

- 100% of shop towels analyzed contained oil and grease.
- Laundered shop towels may contain a variety of metals.
- These metals can get on hands and be ingested.
- The amount of lead that someone might accidentally ingest from laundered shop towels may exceed a Cal EPA Proposition 65 limit (based on using 2.5 towels per day)¹

¹For details on this study and the findings, please visit http://www.india.org/subscrip/inj03_4/p22-37-beyer.pdf

Estimated Intake of Lead From Laundered Shop Towels versus California EPA's Limits

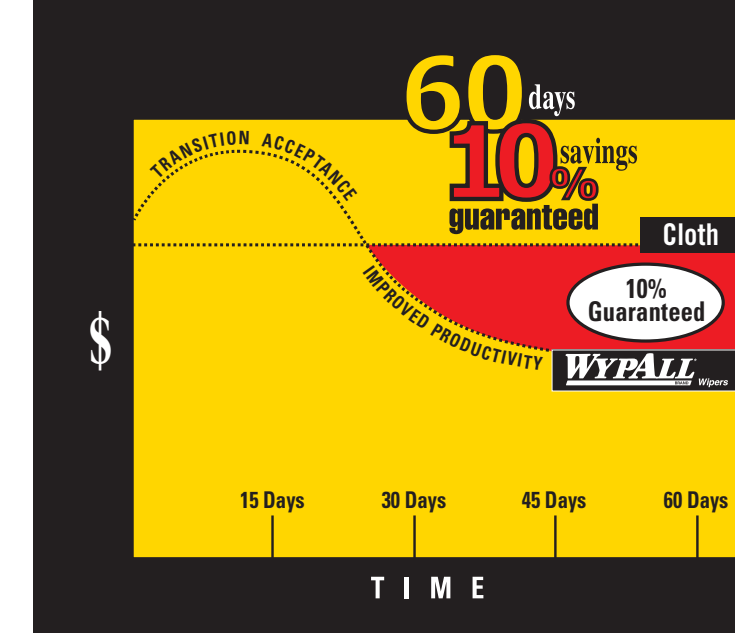

Cal EPA lead limits for reproductive effects:

- Average exposure exceeds by 26 times
- Maximum exposure exceeds by 69 times

Cal EPA lead limits for cancer:

- Maximum exposure exceeds by 1.3 times
